Frederick Baker Ralls at Lawyer angel and the Missing Bookkeeper. Frederick R. Baker, son of the late Frederick Baker, entered his office this norning, carrying a bundle of books, indoubtedly those which related to the Mairs of his dead father.

There were a dozen letters waiting for im, and he gathered them up mechanically and laid them on his desk unnoticed and unopened. He was not inclined to do much talking about the affairs of his father this morning, and his mood was a negative one. His retreat was behind the sensimilar cases:

'I have nothing whatever to say," he went on. "You must understand and see my position. The family look to me to represent them in everything, and all this has been a great shock to me, and I have a lot to think of.

"This man, Seely, has accused my father because my father is dead, and could answer none of his infamous charges. My father was an honest man. I believe it; we all believe it, and I shall try and prove it.

"No matter what is said, I will always believe my father was an honest man." It has been said that your father spent several nights in his office here, surrounded by papers and documents which he was looking over. Do you know what became of them?"

'I have read that statement. It is an absolute lie. My father did not spend any nights in his office during the last few weeks. He was home with us. Concerning any papers he may have had, I decline to answer."

So far as he knew no trace of Book-Reeper Seely's whereabouts had been discovered, and he was very much surprised to learn that "The World" had located the missing man within thirty miles of New York.

"I will see you all after the meeting, and if there is anything of importance done the public will be told all about it," said he,

Discussing Accomplices

As the other directors began to drop in some of them were inclined to talk, and the question as to whether Seely had any accomplices in the bank who assisted him in getting away with the $354,000, which found its way eventually into Lawyer Baker's pockets, was discussed. "In my opinion," said Director Stout, "Seely was the only man in the bank who had the slightest knowledge that any stealing was going (n.

"As he had complete control of the ledger which contained Baker's account, and no one else ever saw it, he was able to manipulate it as he pleased," "Have the directors had any suspician that others in the bank were in complicity with Beely?" he was asked.

est in the Kings, Queens and Suffolk Company, which was organized to operate the Boynton Bicycle Railroad on Long Island.

His name, however, appears at the head of the list of the directors of that Company in a circular which has just been issued showing the number of subscribers to the stock and the amounts which they have paid in.

Secretary George E. Hagerman told a reporter of "The Evening World" this morning that President Crane and a number of other prominent financiers, who had expressed their approval of the bleyele road and their faith in its future, had been asked to serve as a Board of Directors for the first year.

It was understood that they would each subscribe to a nominal amount of stock, £2500, and some of them had done so, and had paid in the money. President Crane, however, had never subscribed or paid in anything, although he had attended one or two meetings of the Board. The last meeting, he said, was held about four months ago.

Repudiates His Office. Mr. Crane, in this circular, appears as Treasurer of the Kings, Queens and Suf-iolk Company, but he mys he has never had snything to do with it, and that his name was used for that office without his correct his consent.
Secretary Hagerman was very much puzzled when he heard this, and said that while the duties of Treasurer had not been very onerous up to the present time he had no idea that Mr. Crane would repudiate the office to which he had been elected.

The New York and Brooklyn Subur-ban Improvement Company, he said, had furnished all the capital required by the Kings, Queens and Suffolk Com-pany up to the present time, and prac-tically controlled the operations of the latter, being the largest stockholders in it.

Talk of a Confederate.

Talk of a Confederate.

The talk about Wail street yesterday to the effect that a higher person in the bank than a clerk or a bookkeeper must have known of the state of Seely's accounts in order to enable him to continue the frauds which he practised upon the bank for so many years without detection, was renewed to-day.

Nothing definite was suggested in the rumors which were affoat, but it was certainly very puzzling to banking men to understand how such a gigantic steni could have been carried on for ten years without discovery, when so simple a device as shifting the bookkeepers in charge of the ledgers occasionally would have instantly disclosed the whole plot. The natural supposition, they say, is that some one in authority must have used his influence to protect Seely and cover up the fraud, especially at those times when the National bank examiners were about. But, even with the knowledge and assistance of a high official, it seems incredible to most people

An Excited Stranger.

The officials of the bank say that shortly after 10 o'clock this morning a man walked into the directors' room and said excitedly:

"Send your lawyer around to see me. I have something of the greatest importance to communicate to him."

The bank officials refuse to give the man's name, and up to 11.20 they say their lawyer. Mr. Bishop, has not yet seen the excited stranger.

Hints of Hypnotism. A prominent physician in Brooklyn to-day said:
"I should not be surprised to hear that Seely was under hypnotic influence exercised by Baker.
"From all accounts Seely was a pale, thin man, of a very nervous temperament—just the kind of a man who would fall a victim to a person of great will power.

"It cannot be denied that Baker had a strong mind. He started in life to earn a living as a barber. He studied law and was admitted to the bar. He subsequently developed into one of the sharpest, shrewdest real estate lawyers in New York City.

"Any man who could build himself up as Beker did must possess a remarkably strong mind."

to the defaulter's whereaboute had been found. As late as noon to-day, according to Secretary D. J. Tompkins, the Shoe and Leather Bank officials had made no demand upon the United States Guarantee Company for the amount of Seely's bond.

"If do not anticipate that the bank will do so under three or four weeks," remarked Secretary Tompkins.

The Secretary said that the United States Guarantee Company had good grounds upon which to file a protest against such a domand by the Shoe and Leather Bank.

"The manner in which the institution was robbed by Seely and his confederate," said Secretary Tompkins, "points to irregularities, and I am confident that our Company could protest suctessfully the peyment of the bond demand.
